

The Sleeping Sponge

Mandrake leaves, along with black nightshade, poppies, and other herbs, were boiled and cooked onto a sponge. The sponge was then reconstituted in hot water, and placed under the patient's nose prior to surgery.

During the Middle Ages, the soporific sponge was developed to provide pain relief during surgery.